The Victorian colour is much darker and bolder than the original Albury and Hawkhurst colours, inging more texture and depth of character to the roofs. A unique manufacturing process gives the newly released Victorian color the look and style of a world-class heritage tile, along with the power and reliability of modern manufacturing. Craftsman Victorian imitates a well-worn tile with its distinctive black pattern and pily surface. On the 175th day of the first Rosemary tile sold in the UK. All Craftsman tiles have a textured surface and bottom, textured and harpooned sides and front edge. Other features are irregular front edge distortion and varying hanging length. David Patrick, head of marketing at Redland, said: Although only available for 18 months, the Rosemary Clay Craftsman range has proven extremely popular with our customers, especially as this is about renovation and renovation and small house builders. The new color was introduced as a result of our market research with a selection of our customer base. They told us they liked Artisan tiles but specifically wanted a darker, older-looking tile to adapt to conservation areas around the South East. We gave them what they wanted. In such cases, use soldier or double soldier courses, individual tiles are not fixed or nailed, always see FixMaster for BS 5534 compatible fixing properties nailing, two nail tiles should be used per Redland expanded its Rosemary Clay Craftsman range to include a third tile: Victorian counterparts, Albury and Hawkhurst have a rougher texture. The first Rosemary Clay Craftsman tile was developed in 1838, the year queen victoria was crowned. They are furnished to buildings throughout the UK and remain in many places to this day, Redland contractors, architects and markers experienced a demand for contemporary versions of the original tile match. In turn, the company developed Victoria. The new tile is designed to add texture and character to traditional roofs. Dark, dark, which has a dark and aged effect, complements the protected areas. Unlike its predecessor, inside the new Victoria Redland's specially designed wind tunnel, it has been tested against high rains and driving winds. Tiles will meet the requirements of the BS 5534: 2014 Stating and Tile Code of Practice, provided that installers comply with Redland's fixing recommendations. In addition to Rosemary Clay Craftsman tiles Victoria, Redland's Rosemary Clay Craftsman range covers Hawkhurst and Albury, which benefits from orange-red harpooned surfaces. It serves to mimic a worn aesthetic with a random black pattern. Redland has employed numerous design elements, including various hanging lengths, textured surfaces and irregular deformations to the front edge, to replicate the view and feel of a handmade tile. While tiles are often used in restoration and renovation projects, we are also in demand for new building developments in conservation areas. Redland has developed an accompanying range of accessories and components to ensure tiles can be placed in various roof configurations.
